4 minutes?!? That's nothing. I once ate an entire mondo-sized shredded beef burrito with verde salsa without taking a single breath.

How they pack all of this functionality into such a small package is impressive, to say the least. I'd love to test drive those keypads!

Ok, I must confess that I'm not the most technically savvy guy around. I know HTML/CSS and a few other things but that's not really programming. (For shame!)

But get this, yesterday I try to log into my WP for this site and it fails. Huh?!? Try to have it re-send the password and it says:

There is no user with that email address

What the helicopter?!?

Um... I log into my Web host, head over to PHPMyAdmin and try to browser my users table. Uh... it's grayed out. Can't browse. I hear the gremlins chuckling.

Turns out there are ZERO records in that table so, naturally, I can't browse it if there's nothing there. Curses!

Contact my host, get a back up of the Db. $25 bucks, thank you very much. Restore it. Same deal. sadness

Today I decide to just plug a new user in that table. Heck, how hard can it be? Turns out, it's trickier than you think but I muddled through, thus this post.

The moral of the story? There is no moral to this story. I'm just venting. Thank you for listening. sigh

Now please resume your daily lives. 8^)

You have to admire a man who when told he's great says, "It's not about me." Churches today, if they're to be more like the true body of Christ, need to be more about helping others.
